

This paper brings the news while it is news to your home when you have the leisure to read it. It is your duty to yourself to read the worth-while news.

MONDAY, JULY 7, 1919.

FOURTEEN PAGES TODAY.

The News Scimitar is first as an advertising medium with Memphis business men. They see results from their advertising expenditure, and results count.

The News Scimitar

WALSH SAYS:

For comfort, style, shape and real economy, we recommend a Walsh tailored, silk finished mohair.

It will last you three years and will be much higher next year—there is no laundry bill attached to it either.

We'll get it out at once.

Walsh
The Tailor

83 South Main St.

Now
Screening

Memphis'
Little
Dearie

Marguerite
CLARK
and
EUGENE O'BRIEN

In the Cleverest Photoplay
Presented Here in Months

"COME OUT
—OF THE KITCHEN".

Thu.—Fri.—Sat.

Mae Marsh, in
"SPOTLIGHT SADIE"

MAJESTIC

Careful, Reliable Dentistry

We offer you the services of qualified, expert dentists at the LOWEST FEES consistent with the BEST WORK.

Perfect Fit—$5.00 up
ting Teeth

CROWNS AND BRIDGEWORK
$4.00 up

ITS IN THE SUCTION
EVERSTICK SUCTION

No matter how hard or flat your mouth or how many unsatisfactory sets of teeth you have had made, we guarantee to make you a set that will fit, look natural and that you can eat with, or it will cost you nothing.

Sets of teeth as low as $5. Porcelain, gold, aluminum and fine rubber plates up to $30.

Gold Inlay, Porcelain, Cement and Amalgam Fillings at ABOUT HALF USUAL PRICES.

We specialize in extraction of teeth with gas or with local anesthetics, as desired or indicated.

Dr. H. H. Fairfax, Dentist
Cor. Main and Madison

Entrance from Main or directly across from old offices on Madison.

Read News Scimitar Want Ads.

Dirigible R-34 and Sister Ship Biggest in the World

NEW YORK, July 7.—The R-34 and her sister ship, the R-35, are the world's greatest dirigibles. The war brought them into being, for they were designed to carry out Germany's Zeppelin and bring death and destruction to German cities. When they were built it was reported that they would be the flagships of a giant fleet of aircraft that would be based on a tremendous air raid on Berlin. For this purpose they were equipped with openings through which 400-pound bombs and 16 of 120-pound bombs could be dropped, while on the upper structure, emplacements were built for batteries of eight guns.

The sudden end of the world war put a stop to the plans for a raid on Berlin, and the architects of the dirigibles turned their attention to remodeling the craft for peaceful purposes. But their plans were again interrupted in June, when the war clouds gathered at reports that Germany would refuse to accept the allied peace terms. The R-34 was swiftly put in war trim and started on a cruise of 2,000 miles over the Baltic and the German coast region. She carried no bombs, but equipped with rapid-firing guns, swept over the enemy's territory at a low altitude, her enormous shadow making a grim threat of the possibilities. The cruise was made without mishap, and when peace finally was assured, the crew of the R-34 resumed preparations for the historic flight to America. Originally it was planned that the voyage should be made by the R-34 also, but it was decided that too much time would be needed to remodel the sister ship.

The R-34 was built in Inchinnan, a little village near Glasgow. In size she rivals all but the very largest ocean liners. Her length is 440 feet, her beam 70 feet and from the bottom of the lower gondola to the top of the gas bag measures 75 feet. Her measurements are very closely those of the liner Adriatic, and if she was stood on end she would overtop the famous Sliger building by 27 feet. Two million cubic feet of hydrogen gas are imprisoned in the enormous balloon. Her resemblance to a monstrous fish is heightened by the fact that she is painted silver color, proved by experiment to be the most successful in resisting the action of the sun in expanding the gas.

The driving power of the airship is supplied by five Sunbeam motors, each 1,000 horse power, which are sufficient to give a speed of close to 70 miles an hour in favorable weather. To feed these motors the airship carries between 7,000 and 8,000 gallons of gasoline, weighing 16 tons and giving her a range of 4,000 nautical miles, or considerably more than the distance between Europe and America and return. The airship's capacity is 25 tons of which 21½ tons is dischargeable weight, or weight which can be disposed of from the ship.

Five gondolas are swung from the gas bag, connected by a 400-foot derrick. These cars there are comfortable accommodations for the crew of 30, with sleeping quarters for half of them. The gondolas on top of the motor supply them with hot water and electric stoves assure them of hot meals. Communication with Mother Earth is provided for by a wireless equipment with a receiving radius of 1,500 miles.

Afterward, Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

CHARGES WILSON FORMED DEFENSE BOARD ILLEGALLY

(Continued From First Page.)

States itself persistently ignored and even violated the law that it allowed interested parties to fix the prices of war supplies; that it put the people of the country to incalculable unnecessary expense and carried through with a high hand.

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

Judge Gary advised the advisory committee, Mr. Graham said, that it was operating in disregard of the Sherman law, the Clayton law and "all other statutes that are supposed to regulate business, particularly big business," when the attorney-general was called upon by the commission to answer Judge Gary. Mr. Graham said, he answered that the matters referred to as violations of law were matters of "national policy" rather than a legal question.

"Afterward," Mr. Graham declared, "when there was evidently a discussion in the committee on the council of the city of Memphis, on the subject of the general policy and it was suggested that this organization might be removed by the plan of the consideration."

"The minutes show that on account of this so-called organization, the war industries board was created, and committees were appointed by the national chamber of commerce, on the letter of the law might be complied with, but by which scheme no part of the method of saying was changed in the slightest degree, so far as I can observe."

Mr. Graham declared that when Maj. Gen. Gottlieb was "called at the eleventh hour to rescue the war department from the public obloquy which was fast settling upon it as a result of the methods and incapacity of the commission, he repudiated and practically defied it."

"Our soldiers were actually dying of pneumonia in the camps because of lack of proper clothing and blankets," Mr. Graham said, "and Gen. Gottlieb assumed the duties of quartermaster-general only on condition he should have free scope in the performance of his duties, unhampered by the council of national defense."

"Immediately he took from the members of that council their power to order purchases and fix prices and soon dispensed with the services of those members of the advisory commission who had so deplorably bungled the control of supplies for the army."

IN MISERY FOR YEARS

Mrs. Courtney Tells How She Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Oskaloosa, Iowa.—"For years I was simply in misery from a weakness and a pain in my back and nothing seemed to do me any good. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and got relief right away. I can certainly recommend this valuable medicine to other women who suffer, for it has done much for me and I know it will help others if they will give it a fair trial."—MRS. LYDIA E. PINKHAM, 108 Eighth Avenue, West Oskaloosa, Ia.

Why will women drag along from day to day, year in and year out, suffering such misery as Mrs. Courtney, when such letters as this are continually being published? Every woman who suffers from displacements, irregularities, inflammation, ulceration, backache, nervousness, or who is passing through the Change of Life, should give this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a great advantage. For special advice write Lydia E. Pinkham, Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of long experience is at your service.

Why will women drag along from day to day, year in and year out, suffering such misery as Mrs. Courtney, when such letters as this are continually being published? Every woman who suffers from displacements, irregularities, inflammation, ulceration, backache, nervousness, or who is passing through the Change of Life, should give this famous